Sun, sand and surf

There were lots of people cooling off last Tuesday evening at Opunake Beach. Locals, tourists, children, young people, older people they were all out enjoying the record breaking temperatures.

From Germany, Henni Ermshaus, Doreen Schulte and Mona Blankenautulland who were travelling around New Zealand in a car had just arrived in Opunake and after a quick snack were off to have a swim in the sea. The water is apparently 4-5 degrees warmer than usual because of an anticyclone in November last year.

Appleton Dustin and Ashleigh Ball from Canada had just been in Raglan and were in Opunake for a few days.Then they weren't sure where they were going they said but were clearly enjoying themselves.

in the baking weather at Opunake Beach as they cooked up a meal of leftovers and lamb chops. The couple who arrived in Auckland a month ago had been travelling around the North Island. They'd come to Opunake because they had friends who'd talked about the place and for the "the surfing, fishing and spectacular views in Taranaki." The pair had just done the Tongariro Crossing and the next day were heading up the Mountain.

For locals Noel Ardern and Joanna Phillips it was an opportunity to introduce son hang out. William to the surf. And for three young chaps,

Don't buy flat-nosed dogs

Trade Me's decision to ban the sale of bulldogs and pugs from March 1 is a great start, but more needs to be done to restrict the breeding of brachycephalic, or flatfaced, dogs.

Pugs, bulldogs and other "flat faced" dogs face a life of misery due to reckless breeding, according to the veterinarians and RSPCA, with many requiring surgery just to be able to breathe properly. Some are sleep deprived because they cannot breathe when they lie down, while others develop oesophageal issues requiring them to be fed in a baby's high chair. These dogs may also be susceptible to heat stress, eye problems, dental disease, skin infections and spinal deformities.

These are just a few of the many problems associated with breeding dogs to have certain unnatural physical traits at the expense of their health. About one four purebred dogs in is afflicted with serious congenital defects, including hypothyroidism, demodectic mange, epilepsy, cataracts, allergies, chronic ear infections, hip dysplasia and others that have been handed down through generations of inbreeding. What's more, while breeders churn our dogs for profit, thousands of homeless animals are destroyed in New Zealand every single year for lack of good homes.

If you have the time, space, money, and compassion needed to care for an animal, please adopt a homeless dog or cat from the local animal shelter or rescue group. Never buy an animal from a pet store or breeder, and always have your animal companion desexed to prevent contributing to the overpopulation crisis that sees so many animals languishing in shelters across the country.

Opunake's young sporting teams

Nearly every time I've read this great newspaper called the Opunake and Coastal News I've been seeing many young sporting teams from Opunake regardless of their sporting codes beating some of New Zealand's top high school teams which is extremely brilliant.

I am now beginning to realise if these young and upcoming sports youngsters do realise that their small town of Opunake has had many great sports people like All Black Graham Mourie and New Zealand's Olympic champion Peter Snell just to name a few in their given sports codes.

Look, it's not the winning it's the matter of taking part, giving your best shot

ADELPHOS

Thought: C.S. Lewis, a former atheist, said Jesus' claims were so radical that he was either a liar, a lunatic, a legend or the Lord. Here are some of Jesus' claims: He claimed to be the Messiah (John 4:25-26).

He claimed to be God's Son (Matthew 26:63-64) who pre-existed in heaven (John 6:38).

He claimed to be the great eternal "I am" of the Old Testament (John 8:58).

He claimed to be the only way to come to His Father— God. (John 14:6). He claimed that hell is a real place of eternal suffering (Matthew 13:42)*.

He claimed to be the giver of eternal life (John 10:28).

He claimed to have the authority to forgive sins (Mark 2:10).

He claimed that he would be resurrected (Luke 9:22).

and if you all win it's good. However, if not don't worry there's always another time when you meet the same team that beat you beforehand, then you all as a team beat them, but one thing to remember - always play and be smarter than your opposition and play as a team, not as individuals.

Remembering myself when attending high school, many of us never had the same opportunities as high schools have today. I played against many Taranaki secondary school teams, but nowadays it's gone national, so take every opportunity you can as one never knows what lies ahead for each pupil and student.

Water a vital commodity

Every New Zealander needs water, and to have irrigation of some sort you have to have water.

Our Federated Farmers should be pleased our coalition government actually recognises that farmers need help with their water, just like our cities and towns.

Everyone knows water is not only the lifeblood on how we all live, but it's becoming a vital necessity to each and every one of us.

Our changeable climatic environment is affecting everyone of us. Now what our farmers must do is to start planning at least one or two years ahead, so if and when we have heavy rainfall or a hot, dry summer causing a drought, everyone should be prepared.

Farmers rely heavily on our overseas exports to bring in the dollars, but like the rest of us, they must all do their part to achieve this by

OPUNAKE & COASTAL NEWS

We have the potential of doing this. This means all of us, our farmers, our cities and towns, along with this great government, working on this important issue.

Coastal wards becoming one

From an outsider's point of view, having two separate working wards within the coast is somewhat stupid and ridiculous and a complete waste of time.

Look everyone, wouldn't it be far better to have one viable, working ward which brings in Opunake, Manaia, Rahotu, Pungarehu and the rural areas which would then be known as the Coastal Plains Ward, similar to how the three separate rugby clubs have formed one strong rugby club. Now there can be one strong coastal ward.

Every separate town can still have their own separate community committees , then have a selected representative on the ward board which could form an extremely strong alliance between the towns and the rural areas.

When it comes to having a meeting with the South Taranaki District Council, this Coastal Plains Ward board could put each case to them and have the support from other members, so before running this idea of having two separate wards, please keep this suggestion in mind.

Remember, every coastal town must start working together for the betterment of the coast itself. I believe there are some extremely capable people who could really help the coast in the potential which it has.

Community focus attracts new chief executive Waid Crockett says he is enjoying his new role as the South Taranaki District Council's chief executive. "You get to do something different every day," he says. He takes over from Craig Stevenson, who has made the move north to be chief executive at the New Plymouth District Council.

For the last four and a half years he has been general manager (the equivalent of chief executive) at the Upper Hunter Valley Shire Council in New South Wales, which had 195 full time staff. Among the services the Council were in charge of were an airport, saleyards, an aged care facility and an early learning centre.

The Upper Hunter Valley has a name for being the horse capital of Australia and when it comes to thoroughbred breeding is second only to Kentucky, Waid says. Hence the importance of keeping the airport well looked after with the wealthy coming in and out on their private jets.

The Shire was the product of a merger of councils back in 2004, in much the same way that South Taranaki District was formed through an amalgamation of councils in 1989. The Shire has half the population of the South Taranaki District, but two and a half times the area.

"The Council I came from is very community-focussed, and this one is too. It's one of the things I like about South Taranaki and one of the reasons why I put my hand up for it," he says.

at Cardiff.

He grew up in Island Bay where he enjoyed the snorkelling and fishing lifestyle before his family shifted during his fifth form year to Levin. His career working for local government began with the then Levin Borough Council. In the years since then, he has worked for the Palmerston North City, Tauranga City and Horowhenua District councils as well as working in private enterprise. He and wife Soraya have owned and operated businesses of their own. They have been married for 33 years and have two children and four grandchildren.

Over the years Waid has also studied through Massey University and the University of Newcastle.

"It's really important to keep your mind active and ticking over," he says.

He moved to Australia in 2011 and was a group leader for Cessnock City Council before taking up the general manager position at the Upper Hunter Valley.

Since coming back to New Zealand, he has been staying at Opunake. He enjoyed Sounds on the Sands at Opunake Beach and has been impressed with what he has seen of the Opunake Walkway. He also says Opunake has the best fish and chips he has tasted for a long time. "Having lived in inland Australia for a long time you don't get that fish and chip taste," he says.

He is looking forward to getting into his golf and exploring further afield. Waid comes from a family of three older brothers and a younger sister. While his sister had made a summit of Mt Taranaki when she was at school, neither Waid or any of his brothers have achieved this feat. He sees his shift to Taranaki as a possible catalyst to change this.

"We've talked about heading up there and I think we might give it a crack in the next year or so," he says.

He participated (six paintings) in the first Impressionist exhibition in 1874 along with Money, Sisley and Pissarro, which had a mixed reception to put it mildly. Later in life he developed severe arthritis, but he found ways to continue painting. He died in 1919 aged 78.

Government allows new seismic blasting in Maui dolphin habitat

Environmental organisation WWF-New Zealand says that the New Zealand government is failing to protect the last 63 Māui dolphins by allocating oil and gas exploration rights within Māui dolphin habitat off Taranaki.

The Ministry for Business, Innovation and Employment recently announced that it is handing out a 12-year oil and gas exploration permit for 547km2 of ocean within the known range of our critically endangered Māui dolphins.

"Allocating oil exploration rights in the Māui dolphin habitat is just irresponsible. Only around 63 Māui dolphins survive today and the seismic blasting used in oil exploration is known to affect whales and dolphins," said WWF-New Zealand CEO Livia Esterhazy.

"This makes no sense when all three parties in the current government have pledged to extend protection for Māui dolphins. We should not be exposing these critically endangered animals to additional threats like seismic blasting. Instead, the government should be doing everything it can to protect these dolphins throughout their entire habitat."

WWF calls for full protection for the last 63 Maui dolphins wherever they swim. This means a genuine sanctuary, ending set netting and conventional trawling with help for fishers to transition to dolphin-safe methods, and placing a moratorium on risky marine mining activities and seismic testing, from Maunganui Bluff to the Whanganui River mouth, including harbours, in waters out to 100 metres deep.

WWF-New Zealand also calls for government to end

new oil exploration to complement its climate change commitment to pass a Zero Carbon Act.

"Even if Māui dolphins did not live there, it would still be inconsistent for the government to keep allowing new oil and gas exploration while aiming to lower our greenhouse gas emissions," Ms Esterhazy said.

"Business as usual will not get New Zealand to the government's target of netzero emissions by 2050. We should be planning for the transition to a 100% renewable, clean energy future, not continuing to search for new fossil fuels."

We have sent an Open Letter calling for an end to new oil exploration www.wwf. org.nz/?15481/endnewfossils

ople told Take fewer medicines pe

The Council of Medical Colleges (CMC) is encouraging older people to talk to their doctor about whether they could take fewer medicines.

The CMC coordinates the Choosing Wisely campaign, which encourages patients to ask their health professional do I really need this test or procedure? What are the risks? Are there simpler, safer options? And what happens if I don't do anything?

In the Taranaki DHB region, 38% of people aged over 65 are taking five or more long-term medications. The all-of-New Zealand rate is 35%.

CMC chair Dr Derek Sherwood says it is important older people get their medicines reviewed regularly.

"This helps make sure you are receiving the best treatment. When a doctor or pharmacist reviews your medicines they will check things like what medicines you are taking and why, how many different medicines you are taking and any side effects you may be experiencing."

He says some medicines are more likely to cause side effects in older people.

"Benzodiazepines like diazepam and antipsychotic medicines like clozapine or risperidone are two examples of this. Side effects include feeling dizzy when standing up, feeling sick, not thinking clearly and having blurred eye sight.

"These side effects can also make the person unsteady on their feet, increase the risk of falling, and can affect driving.

"It is important that the benefits of taking such medicines outweigh the risks that's why it's so important to review your medicines regularly with your doctor."

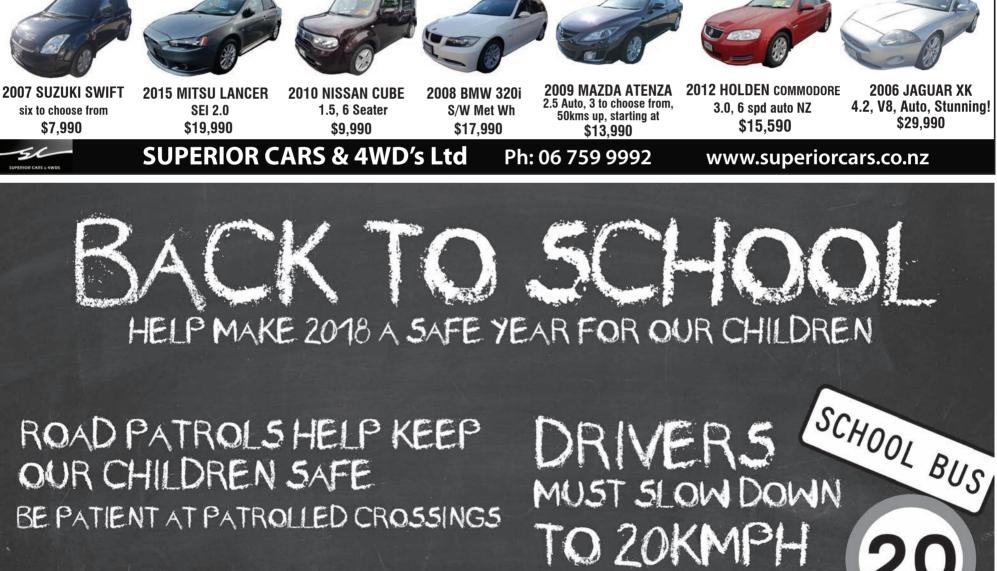

Dr Sherwood says stopping a medicine can seem daunting, especially if you've been taking it for a long time.

"But for many older people, stopping a particular medicine may actually benefit their health. The more medicines you take, the more likely you are to experience side effects and interactions.

"Many older people successfully stop medicines without feeling worse. In fact, you may feel better and improve your quality of life - were being caused by your medicines.' The Choosing Wisely campaign was launched in New Zealand over a year ago. It is led by the Council of Medical Colleges, with partners the Health Quality & Safety Commission and Consumer NZ, and wide sector support.

Summer callouts for Opunake

A bonfire that was best not lit.

dry spell, vehicles have a tendency to slide out of control once the roads become wet. This is exactly what happened around morning tea time on Thursday January 4. A young lady had the misfortune of putting her car on its roof at the first corner past Winstone's quarry on the Wiremu Road. Fireman Sam was working at the quarry and couldn't believe his eyes when he spotted a vehicle upside down on the road. Fortunately, the driver wasn't seriously injured in the ordeal, but the same couldn't be said for her vehicle. Fireman Beau would like to thank young Will Hurley for helping place the road cones to direct other motorists around the incident.

Cheers Will.

The 13th day of January was certainly unlucky for a local farmer. It was the day his four wheeler motor bike was burnt to a cinder. As you can see in the photo that was taken prior to our arrival, there wasn't a lot left for us to save.

We were called to the Kura Kaupapa on Tasman Street on Thursday 18th when smoke was seen coming from a room at the northern end of the property. It turned out that a smouldering hangi sack, which had been tossed onto a nearby trailer earlier, was the culprit. It seems that the strong northerly had fanned the sack, which caused it to ignite and send a rogue spark into the older building. Murphy's Law came into play because the hot ember landed in some dry rot in a door and managed to set it smouldering. Luckily one of the Stanley building boys, who were working on another part of the school, noticed the smoke and dialled us up. The building team managed to halt the flame with an extinguisher until the brigade arrived. The extinguisher was only a small one but it sure did its job and proved just how valuable they are. They are so inexpensive these days, you would be foolish not to have one in your vehicle.

Later the same day, we were called to a King Street property where a pile of timber and car parts, somehow, decided to have fun and hold a bonfire. The call was phoned in by a caring neighbour who saw black smoke billowing from the property and thought it was the house on fire. Luckily it wasn't because we were struggling to get a full crew, and the outcome would have been quite different.

The Christmas Eve street parade is always a buzz for us. It was wonderful to see so many people out and about, and it is great throwing out lollies to the future fire fighters. The children who were lucky enough to have a ride in the appliance looked like they enjoyed it as well.

Our last raffle for the year, the fire engine and suit, was won by Nigel Robinson. We would like to thank all those who have supported us throughout the year and Nigel would probably like to thank Constable Brophy for drawing his name out of the helmet.

Milestone for Mount Messenger bypass project

The Mt Messenger Bypass project has moves a step closer.

Public submissions are being called by the New Plymouth District Council and Taranaki Regional Council for the NZ Transport Agency's resource consent applications and Notice of Requirement for a designation over the land required to build the bypass. Transport Agency Director Regional Relationships, Central North Island, Parekawhia McLean says the public and community leaders have been supportive of the bypass going ahead.

"Thorough environmental and geotechnical investigations together with ongoing engagement with iwi and the community have informed our consent applications," says Ms McLean.

The new $200 million bypass with a bridge and a tunnel provides a faster route with a lower and less steep gradient through the Mt Messenger section of State Highway 3 north of New Plymouth. It will improve safety, resilience and route reliability, avoid geologically unstable areas and contribute to the ongoing economic growth of the Taranaki region.

The 20 working days notification period is open for public submissions. During this period the Transport Agency and its Mt Messenger Alliance partners will be available at some local events and venues in Taranaki to discuss the consent proposals.

Bluehaven complex will boost Taranaki GDP

Bluehaven complex to boost Taranaki GDP by $1 billion within 8 years of opening

More than $126 million per annum will be pumped into the Taranaki economy when a major new commercial complex to be built in New Plymouth is fully operational. The construction phase alone will contribute $85 million to the region's GDP and provide approximately 300 jobs, with 1,500 jobs following when the complex opens.

These preliminary figures were prepared by Aucklandbased analysts Insight Economics.

Tauranga-based Bluehaven Management says its plan is to transform the rundown former fertiliser plant into a "high-end gateway statement that serves the whole Taranaki region - one that people can be proud of and enjoy for generations."

It is already known that the complex will house food and beverage outlets, retail

City Gateway. The new development will transform the current site into a high qulity gateway to New Plymouth. stores, a supermarket, a sixscreen cinema, a 75-room hotel, additional large-format retail and offices.

The development is also likely to bring a number of new brands to the region. Among new details revealed recently, plans show that the complex is intended to have over 1,200 car parks including 400 covered car parks. It is understood this will be the largest number of free car parks for visitors to a single site in the Taranaki region.

Also revealed is the fact that the centre will have two main levels with a four-level hotel, and that the main building envelopes will actually be lower than many of the existing structures on the site. Bluehaven CEO Nathan York said the company had been considering investment options for the complex since at least 2016, and had "ultimately chosen to go ahead with a massive show of faith" in the Taranaki region.

"We believe that New Plymouth and the wider region have a bright future - and we're willing to back that belief with a major investment into the local economy," he said.

The site will also include a re-established Parapara-iti Pa, which Mr York said "is a wonderful initiative for hapū as a significant historical site."

Mr York said that Bluehaven had already been in discussions with local hapū, Council representatives and prospective tenants, and was committed to being open and consultative with the wider community after the consent process was completed.

He said that such a major project relied on the support of the community, authorities and region to ensure the clean-up and development of the site and its ongoing success.

Record number of whio ducklings on Mount Taranaki

A record number of whio ducklings have been located on Mt Taranaki in what is proving to be a boom year for the rare native blue duck.

Fifty six ducklings have been found by Department of Conservation rangers on the eight rivers that DOC surveys on the Mounga as part of the Whio Forever partnership.

DOC biodiversity ranger Joe Carson says on January 8, three more young male ducks were released into the Waipuku Stream on the eastern side of Mt Taranaki, further boosting the whio population.

"These three juvenile ducks will increase the genetic pool of our population, helping to diversify and strengthen the lines. The release caps off a record year for breeding with 56 ducklings counted within the surveyed rivers, signaling positive movement towards a self-sustaining population of whio on Mt Taranaki," she says.

The three new ducks were bred at the Nga Manu Nature reserve in Waikanae. They are three and a half months old and have spent the last few weeks at DOC's Turangi whio creche to 'harden up' before being released into the wild.

The local whio/blue duck population on Mt Taranaki was designated "functionally extinct" in 1945 because of predation by stoats and rats, but has since built up to 33 pairs.

"Taranaki Mounga is delighted to build on the great work already underway to increase the whio population

Whio ducklings galore which pleases DDC staff. on the mountain. Whio are particularly vulnerable during nesting time so it's fantastic to hear we have a record number of chicks on Mt Taranak this breeding season," say Taranaki Mounga Project Manager Sean Zieltjes

Coping with the big dry

The current weather is too hot for the townies, and it's heart-breaking to see the parched land and worrying to think about the long term effects for the local community. Everyone wants some rain!

It's well-known that farmers have been forced to dry off or drop to once a day milking five or even six months early. That's a big hit to take and a long time to be without an income. Fortunately there are things being done to help and we really need to make sure the message gets through to those who need it.

The Rural Support Trust is doing a great job looking after our farmers. A couple of weeks ago I was at a picnic they organised to get people affected by the drought together and remind them they're not alone. I know that turnouts at similar events have been positive and it was good to hear first-hand how people are coping and how they're getting through. We often hear how resilient farmers are and that's true, but it doesn't mean they need to battle through alone.

Tomorrow (Friday February 2^{nd}) I'll be visiting farms in the area and businesses in Opunake to see how the drought is impacting on locals. I'll contact Damien O'Connor, Minister of Primary Industries and make sure he knows exactly how things are on the ground in Taranaki since his early trip a few weeks ago.

Looking at NIWA's drought index, all of Taranaki is now considered to be in severe drought.

I just want to encourage farmers, businesspeople and anyone affected by the situation to look out for each other. It is important that you remember there are support networks in place and waiting to help.

My office is open in New Plymouth 9am-4.30pm Monday to Friday and you can contact me at newplymouthmp@parliament.govt.nz or 06 759 1363.

I'm not much of a rain dancer, but my team and I will do whatever we can to support you.

Electoral (integrity) bill receives second reading

The Electoral (Integrity) Amendment Bill has received its first reading in Parliament.. Justice Minister Andrew Little says the Bill will help uphold the public's confidence in the integrity of Parliament, MPs and the voting system.

"The Bill will introduce a mechanism to allow an MP's seat to be declared vacant when that MP departs the political party for which he or she was elected.

"This ensures that it is New Zealanders who determine the shape of Parliament through their votes – rather than political manoeuvring within parties. "It is a key principle of MMP that voters' decisions, not political moves within Parliament, determine each party's share of the seats. "This Bill puts into law a process to uphold that prinmore confidence in the integrity of the electoral system."

"The Bill will mean the MP departing their party, or that the party's leader can choose to activate a process to have that MP's seat declared vacant. This would mean that person would no longer be an MP. The vacant seat would then be filled either at a byelection if the MP was elected as a constituency MP, or by the next person on the party's list if the MP was a list MP.

"Electoral integrity legislation is not new in New Zealand. This new Bill is closely modelled on the 2001 Law considered and applied by the Supreme Court. That Law followed public concerns about MPs leaving the parties they were elected for and it had a 'sunset clause' meaning it expired in 2005.

"This new Bill does not contain a sunset provision. The values of integrity and proportionality, and keeping the shape of Parliament in the hands of voters, are worth protecting, and will continue to be just as important in the future."

"The bill will now go to the Justice Select Committee for further review. I encourage all members of the public to participate in the select committee process and have their say," says Andrew Little.

James Patrick Byrne Anderson - usually known as Jim Anderton - was born 21 January, 1938 in Auckland and died in Christchurch on 7 January 2018. Following a requiem mass at Sacred Heart Catholic Church, Addington, Christchurch, he was buried at Onetangi Cemetery, Waiheke Island.

Jim joined the Labour Party in 1963 and resigned in 1989 when, as a MP he had refused to vote for the sale of the Bank of New Zealand - something the Labour Government has promised it wouldn't ever do. Prior to his resignation, he had been suspended from the Labour Party caucus. He was critical of his Party's swing to the right under PM David Lange and prominent Cabinet members such as Roger Douglas, Richard Prebble, Michael Bassett and David Caygill. There were MPs who mostly agreed with him such as Larry Sutherland, Sonia Davies and Helen Clark who later referred to the "dark days of Rogernomics" but were unwilling or unable to take a stand with Jim Anderton.

He was trained as a teacher, but after two years teaching at St Peters College had several other jobs including founding his own business Andersons Holdings (manufacturing) with his brother and the brothers bought a superette in Parnell. He was also, at one time, employed by the Catholic Youth movement. He married Joan in in 1960 and they had five children together. Later on, he was married to Carole. His son Chris gave one of the eulogies at his service and spoke of his love for cricket, music (eg Beatles, Simon and Garfunkel), fishing, and go-karting. As a

Jim Anderton

On a sad note one of his daughters committed suicide which inspired his interest in suicide prevention and mental health.

His earlier foray into politics was in the local body arena; he was elected as councillor in 1965 for Manukau City and later the ARA (Auckland Regional Authority). His bids to become Auckland mayor in 1974 and 1977 were not successful (Later, in 2010 he would also fail to win the Christchurch mayoralty).

Time magazine named Jim as one of outstanding young people in the world likely to become major figures. He became prominent in the Labour Party and was the 25th President from 1979 to 1984. He was, without doubt, the best President in memory as he reorganised and revitalised the Party – membership soared in consequence.

Jim was elected to Parliament in 1984 for Sydenham (then Wigram) and remained an MP until 2011.

As the Rogernomics reforms took hold, with the highest recorded unemployment in NZ since World War 2, interest rates topping 20%, NZ owned assets being sold to overseas interests, vulnerable people becoming poorer (and richer people accumulating more wealth), as well as many farmers being forced off their properties, Jim was increasingly uneasy about what he saw as Labour neglecting their basic underlying principles. He endeavoured to become president again to try and slow the reforms, but David Lange made a concerted effort to prevent this - and succeeded, despite Jim's outstanding earlier presidency.

After leaving Labour Jim founded the New Labour Party (1989-1991), which was "based on social-democratic principles Labour used to stand for." Next, an alliance of minor parties (Greens, Mana Motuhake, Liberals, Democrats, New Labour Party) followed called the Alliance (1991-2002) and finally the Progressives (2002-2011). Latterly the third party was renamed 'Jim Anderton's Progressives'.

As Labour returned to some semblance of its political roots, under PM Helen Clark, Jim made his peace with the Party. He was Deputy Prime Minister from 1999 to 2002 and held various Cabinet posts with distinction.

Examples include Kiwi bank (owned by our nation), the NZ Superannuation Find (with Dr/Sir Michael Cullen), the antinuclear stance with the banning of USS Buchanan - and more recently the Christchurch Stadium (He was Chair of the Stadium Trust) and the agreed restoration of the Christchurch Cathedral (with ex-MP Philip Burdon).

In a special ceremony last year in June Jim Anderton was made a Companion of the New Zealand Order of Merit. The high honour was bestowed by the Governor-General Dame Patsy Reddy who made a special trip to Christchurch for the occasion.

Here are a few quotes from some prominent people:

"He was a towering figure in the Labour Movement for several decades. He will be remembered as someone who stood up for his principles and for the people he represented. His integrity during difficult times marked him out as a true leader." (Rt Hon Jacinda Ardern, Prime Minister).

"I saw with my own eyes the extraordinary passion he brought to his portfolios," (Lianne Dalziel, Mayor of Christchurch).

"Jim Anderton was a strongminded politician who was admired by friend and foe alike. He was a critical figure in the evolution of MMP." (Rt Hon Bill English, Leader of the Opposition)

"It is impossible to reimagine my life without you lighting the path." (Laila Harre - former MP).

Rook sightings raise concerns

Is it a bird? Is it a plane? Is it a large black bird threatening cropping and horticulture in Taranaki?

Taranaki Regional Council is urging the public to report potential sightings of a large black glossy bird called a rook. It is slightly larger than a magpie, with a harsh call. The public should contact Taranaki Regional Council - 0800 736 222 - about any potential sightings, noting the number of birds, location and behaviour. Are they flying and in what direction, are they feeding or roosting? Rooks are a pest animal, which in high numbers are capable of wiping out crops and horticulture, and have been sighted in New Plymouth.

The Council wants to eradicate them before they become established in the region. Rooks have so far been prevented from establishing in Taranaki and sightings are extremely rare. However, rooks have been a problem in the east of the North Island, from magpie, the birds are capable of wiping out crops in a few days, as flocks target them as an alternative food source to insects. Rooks may target young crops, especially cereals and new grass, eating grubs, seed or seedlings. Ripening walnuts are also a favourite.

They can also impact the native bird population as they harass native birds and restrict their range.

Big jump in tourist numbers for New Plymouth

A big boost in tourism to the region, a near sellout crowd for Yusuf/Cat Stevens concert, creating a community space in Marfell Park and having a budget surplus were just some of the many success stories for New Plymouth District Council (NPDC) last year.

The Lonely Planet had named Taranaki as one of the top two regions in the world to visit in 2017 and this helped to bring thousands of extra international travellers to the province.

Figures from Stats NZ for the year ending October 2017 show a massive 25.3 per cent rise in international guest nights in Taranaki. Overall guest nights in the region were up 4.5 per cent as well.

Visitors are flocking to New Plymouth.

No down side in getting hearing tested

Audiologist Lisa Keen.

Did you know that after arthritis and high blood pressure, hearing loss is one of the top three chronic health concerns facing older adults? Individuals over the age of 70 with a mild or greater hearing loss will have a higher risk of developing dementia due to the increased cognitive effort required. The good news, however, is that hearing loss has also been identified as one of nine modifiable health and lifestyle factors if eliminated that or improved might prevent or lessen the effects of dementia. Professionals have recommended that if you have hearing loss it makes sense to have it addressed as soon as possible. This can help lead to less social isolation and depression which are also risk factors for dementia. If you have never had a hearing test, book one today, you never know what you've been missing. If you do have a hearing loss, address it sooner rather than later. There is no down side

VoyageintotheHeartlandexhibition travelling to Lysaght-Watt Gallery

Voyage into the Heartland: Photographic Works from the Batten Collection will be travelling to the Lysaght-Watt Gallery in Hawera from February 7 - March 4. Come and discover the photographic works of the Batten Family from Tokaora. New Zealanders have always had a desire to travel and discover the undiscoverable. From the 1957 journey to Antarctica by adventurer Sir Edmund Hillary (1919-2008), to Turi's voyage from Rangiatea to New Zealand over 700 years ago, we have voyaging deep within our veins. sensitive objectivity. While their landscape images have a sense of objectivity and bleak isolation, their portraiture shows an affectionate bond between the photographers and subjects. This familiarity creates an unburdened, carefree outlook from each in New Zealand. These landscape images speak of a time where landscape photography was in its infancy and still forging its own identity.

This collection focuses both on powerful landscapes and intimate portraits achieving a great aesthetic approach.

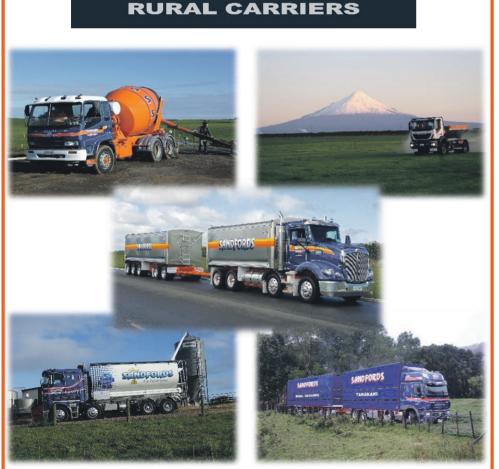

During the early 1930s the family set out across the North Island of New Zealand with their camera and a horse called Judy to photograph the central region of the Land of the Long White Cloud. Their perspective is a particular one, carrying us on a journey into early 20th century life in New Zealand with practical but sitter they photograph. These experiences stretched their understanding of the world around them and ultimately had a great effect on the family.

Voyage into the Heartland showcases the Batten Collection, a unique photographic anthology exposing original landscapes of the 1930s unseen before to their photography where every image engages us, allowing us to immerse ourselves in their world.

The exhibition season begins 7 February and runs till 4 March 2018 at the Lysaght Watt Gallery, 4-6 Union Street (on The Square), Hawera.

Grand opening of Jean Sandel Village Centre

There was great excitement from residents and staff at the opening of the new extension to the Jean Sandel Retirement Village.

The mayor of New Plymouth, Neil Holdom cut the ribbon to officially open the village centre at a gathering of 220 residents.

The extension includes a movie theatre, billiard room, enlarged dining and lounge area, bar and a magnificent deck looking towards the hills.

Neil said, "It's an amazing facility and a first class place. It reflects the Taranaki attitude to make things happen. It's ultimately the people who are working here that will generate the culture, and in Taranaki we care about our people. We treat them with respect and create opportunities to have a good time and enjoy themselves."

He congratulated the construction team and remarked that he knew how difficult it is running a building site where people are living and working.

"I have a huge respect for the construction industry. It (the village) looks beautiful and I love the fact it is a community facility where people can talk to each other and build relationships and spend time together.'

Among the audience were two residents who had family connections with the council.

A previous deputy mayor, Wilkinson who David lives with his wife Jan in a townhouse in the village said the extension was fabulous and moving to the village was the best thing he ever did. He chatted with the mayor who allowed him to wear the mayoral chain which they both agreed was quite heavy.

Chong's Margaret grandfather, Edward Gilmore, was mayor of New Plymouth from 1933-53. Margaret and her husband Brian were enjoying the celebration and Margaret searched the mayoral chain for the family name.

The extension began in February last year and Village manager Shelly Mills was thrilled with the result. "It's a wonderful space for our residents. It's spacious, relaxing and comfortable."

Fast feed fix for winter

Fixing all the pasture damage caused by a harsh season is no overnight job. But prompt, strategic use of short-term ryegrass will offset the immediate challenge of growing enough feed for winter.

That's the advice from pasture specialist Bruce Paterson, Agriseeds, as many farmers head into autumn with poor daily grass growth rates, low pasture covers and much less grass silage than normal.

One way to tackle this is sowing annual ryegrass as a winter feed 'crop', he says. "A modern annual like Hogan, for example, rockets out of the ground, and grows literally tonnes of high spring. "There are two big advantages with this. First, quality feed through late autumn, winter and early

you get some grass growing again, fast. Second, it gives you a way to take pressure off other parts of the farm that really need to be looked after if they are to recover and grow well next season." Because it's an annual,

Hogan will need to be sprayed out and re-sown in late spring. But by then it will have done its job, and few alternatives can do it better, Bruce says. "Hogan grows 1t DM/ha more than old genetics like Moata or Tama. It's at least 20 per cent faster out of the ground, too, because it was specifically bred for rapid establishment, so you don't have to wait as long before grazing it."

Hogan's significant yield advantage over old genetics is valued by the DairyNZ Forage Value Index (FVI) at $380 per ha extra profit.

Growing Hogan as a winter

with

crop will subsequently set farmers up for sowing a summer crop like chicory in spring.

"In effect we're talking about growing as much DM as possible off one paddock in the next 12 months. If you look at what your existing pasture is growing next to the potential DM of two high yielding, high quality crops in a row, there's no comparison."

Jecember

Because of this he recommends sowing Hogan in paddocks which have been severely damaged by extreme wet and dry weather over the past several months. These are the ones that need to be cultivated and put through a full renewal programme. They can be sown with new perennial pasture seed in autumn 2019.

Hogan is recommended for sowing at 25-30 kg/ha.

Progress welcomed

The Dairy Companies Association of New Zealand (DCANZ) has welcomed the news that negotiators concluded the deal on the Comprehensive and Progressive Trans Pacific Partnership (CPTPP) in Tokyo.

"It's pleasing to see deal on CPTPP come together" says DCANZ Chairman Malcolm Bailey.

"While the agreement does not go as far as we would like in terms of dairy access, there are some useful gains in markets such as Japan and Mexico," says Mr Bailey. "CPTPP market access outcomes are also critical to avoid New Zealand dairy exporters ending up at a tariff disadvantage in key markets, including Japan". Over the past year there have been some big trade developments in the transpacific region, including the conclusion of FTA negotiations between Japan and the EU. The EU and Mexico are also looking to upgrade their existing FTA. Both are key markets for New Zealand dairy exports, with the Japanese market worth more than $795 million for New Zealand dairy exporters in the year to November 2017.

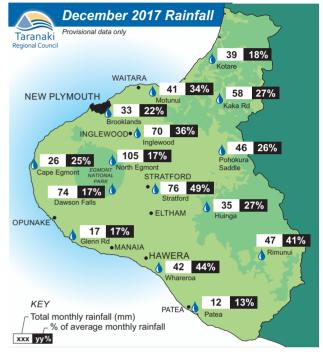

"Given these developments, the timely implementation of CPTPP is critical. It is great to see indications that the agreement will be signed very soon".

Mr Bailey said it was clear that New Zealand was continuing to play a strong Continued page 17 Rainfall was extremely low in Taranaki for December with only 13% – 55% of normal being recorded, according to Taranaki regional Council figures.

ear end

Patea and Stony (near Okato) recorded just 13% of normal rainfall with 12.4 mm and 23.5 mm respectively. The rainfall site at Taungatara (east of Opunake) didn't fare much better, receiving just 15% of normal with 18.5 mm for the month. Nineteen of the 27 sites that rainfall is monitored at recorded new December monthly minimum totals, these sites were: North Egmont, Dawson Falls, Kahui Hut, Hillsborough, Brooklands, Mangati (Bell Block), Egmont Village, Everett Park, Inglewood, Huinga, Kotare, Okoki, Pohokura Saddle, Stony (Okato), Taungatara (Te Kiri), Manaia, Patea, Omaru and Omahine. Rainfall days were between seven and 15 days, with a majority of the rainfall occurring in afternoon thunderstorms.

Rainfall for the year ended up being between 88% and 124% of normal, with North Egmont being the only site that recorded below normal for the year (6257.5 mm). At the end of November all sites, except North Egmont had already received their mean annual rainfall.

Old genetics don't make the cut. It's the same with ryegrass. Hogan establishes phenomenally, and out yields old annual ryegrasses Tama and Moata by over 1 t DM/ha.

- that represents an extra profit of $380/ha. Sow the best in plant genetics.

"While many Kiwis cherish him as a straightshooter who spoke up for the disadvantaged and less well off, his significant contribution to the primary sector also should not be forgotten."

People rural in communities will join other New Zealanders from many walks of life in mourning the loss of a respected MP and leader who fought hard for the causes he believed in.

There were some raised eyebrows when Helen Clark appointed Mr Anderton as Agricultural and Biosecurity Minister in 2005. Three weeks into the role, he told a meeting of the Federated Farmers National Council that while he didn't know much about farming compared to his audience, as Economic Development Minister for the previous six years he brought expertise in bringing industries together to improve their economic performance and "I'm the minister for 'getting things done'."

"So it proved," Katie said. "He turned out to be one of our best agriculture ministers. He was a strong advocate for the sector, and regularly reminded New Zealanders that farming was the most important source of export income for New Zealand.

"I was greatly impressed and inspired as a young leader when I had the privilege of accompanying him when he visited the West Coast in his early days as the new minister. My lasting memory of Jim Anderton is of an approachable and accessible man who listened and got things done."

Mr Anderton championed the importance of irrigation opposition, he was a strong supporter of the highly successful Recognised Seasonal Employer (RSE) scheme that came into effect in 2007. It has been vital to the horticulture and viticulture industries to recruit workers from overseas for seasonal work when there are not enough New Zealand workers.

much is straightforward when the season is However consistent. in times of flux, how do we effectively manage the risk of facial eczema?

It seems that each year our seasons change and farm management tools are needed to assess day to day decisions. After a dry start to December, and patchy rain over New Year that didn't quite get to all of Taranaki, we need all the support we can to make sure milk production doesn't drop. But it's not just the milking herd that are at risk; dry cows and young stock are also in need of facial eczema protection.

The typical rule of thumb when it comes to facial eczema is three consecutive nights over 12oC can influence spore levels in the pasture. The common management practice has been to start off with zinc dosing at a low rate and build up to combat the rising spore levels, giving the animal time to accumulate enough zinc to mitigate the risks with facial eczema. A gradual increase in dose rate can also help off-set the unpalatability of zinc. Using products such as SealesWinslow's Zincmax+ which already includes flavouring peppermint offsets the bitter mineral flavour.

When the spore levels fluctuate, how can we best support our animals through this period? Maintaining a constant zinc dose rate throughout the risk season is the easiest way to ensure that all animals are getting protection. Consistency is key to effectiveness of the zinc treatment. This helps prevent reduced milk production as well as potential liver damage that can take months to regenerate, if at all.

The high levels of zinc that are required to combat facial eczema dramatically reduce the uptake of copper. Copper is essential for reproduction and growth. By including chelated copper in Zincmax+, we can ensure the copper liver levels aren't affected. Chelated or organic copper is protected from the rumen microbes and therefore directly taken up by the cow. Even when feeding 3kg PKE there can be insufficient copper in the diet over the facial eczema season.

All in all, it is important to ensure all animals are getting zinc, including young stock and dry cows. Remember that consistent dosing is essential for full coverage, and using Zincmax+, combination product with peppermint flavour helps to maintain copper levels for reproduction and growth.

Tax relief for drought affected farmers

Revenue Minister Stuart Nash has confirmed tax relief measures will be extended to farmers in drought areas.

In late December and early January the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Communities Damien O'Connor classified the drought as a mediumscale adverse event across Taranaki, parts of Manawatu-Whanganui and Wellington, and the Grey and Buller districts of the South Island's West Coast.

Local authorities affected by the drought classification are: Stratford, New Plymouth, South Taranaki, Whanganui, Rangitikei, Manawatu, Palmerston North, Horowhenua, Kapiti Coast, Upper Hutt, Porirua, Wellington, Lower Hutt, Grev and Buller.

Mr Nash says the declaration of an adverse event allows government agencies to step up with additional support for farmers and growers in affected areas. "We know the rural community is having a tough time. Many farmers will have more urgent issues on their minds than tax compliance. Inland Revenue has confirmed there will be greater flexibility and assistance for those affected.

Palmerston I am pleased that IR is nua, Kapiti able to respond in a more itt, Porirua, accommodating way.

"I strongly encourage any farmers who are struggling to meet their tax obligations because of the adverse conditions to talk to their accountant and engage with Inland Revenue. We acknowledge the scale of the challenges faced by farmers in exceptionally dry conditions.

"If any farmer has concerns, please talk to the experts who can help," Mr Nash says.

Inland Revenue will allow farmers in drought areas to make late income equalisation deposits for the 2016-2017 income tax year. They will also be able to apply for early refunds. This allows farmers to smooth out fluctuations in their income from year to year.

"Farmers can now better plan their financial response to the drought conditions. Tax rules are able to take account of extraordinary events like droughts, floods or earthquakes. It is important to acknowledge the reality of the situation that farmers face," Mr Nash says.

Acting Social Development minister Peeni Henare has announced drought-stricken farmers will have access to Rural Assistance Payments (RAPs).

"We know some of our farming families have been hit hard by this long and challenging dry period and are struggling to make ends meet. We want them to know they can ask for help and that there is support available to them," he said.

"We also recognise that even with some rainfall, droughts can be slow to recover from and that the effects will be felt longer term.

"RAPs will be accessible from Monday 22 January. They are provided to help meet essential living expenses with a payment equal to Jobseeker Support for farmers affected by an adverse event.

"The income of some farmers has been severely impacted. I urge those suffering hardship as a result of the drought to contact Work and Income to see what they might be eligible for.

The drought classification has also triggered other government support with $160,000 in North Island areas and $50,000 in South Island areas going to the Rural Support Trusts for recovery coordination and on-farm recovery facilitators

Dairy Industry Award activity heats up

While many people have had a rest from the stresses of work over the Christmas and New Year break, the reality can be different for farmers.

Summer is a busy time in the farming calendar, and General Manager of the New Zealand Dairy Industry Awards Chris Keeping says it is just as important for farmers to take a break as any other person.

"Farming is a 24/7

commitment, and it is vital that farmers find time to rest and relax with family and friends," she said.

However, Chris says entrants in the New Zealand Dairy Industry Awards who used their summer holiday to prepare for the 2018 competitions will be one step ahead of their competitors, as Awards activity heats up. The awards, which oversee the Share Farmer of the Year, Dairy Manager of the Year and Dairy Trainee of the Year competitions, received 374 entries prior to Christmas.

General Manager Chris Keeping says some information events for entrants and sponsors have already been held in some of the awards' 11 regions, and the rest will take place over the next few weeks.

"These events provide an opportunity for entrants to meet, and to learn more about the Awards and what to expect, as well as connecting people within the industry."

Chris says the events are also useful for entrants as they prepare for judging, which began for the Dairy Trainee competition in Taranaki, Hawkes Bay/ Wairarapa and Northland on January 24.

There is no on farm judging component in the Dairy Trainee competition. Instead

Residential, lifestyle and farms around The Coast and New Plymouth entrants participate in a short practical session covering every day farming tasks and an interview.

The time allowed for on farm judging is two hours in the Share Farmer of the Year competition and oneand-a-half hours in the Dairy Manager of the Year competition. It is up to each entrant to determine how best to cover off the judging criteria, so it is important that entrants make the most of that time and plan well. "This is where time spent planning over the summer will really pay off," says Chris.

The first regional winners will be announced in Hawkes Bay on March 1, while the West Coast/Top of the South region is the last to name its winners on March 27. All regional winners will progress to a national final in Invercargill on May 12.

Rise in preventable deaths reflects growing pressure on water safety sector

Provisional figures from Water Safety New Zealand (WSNZ) for 2017 show a 13 per cent increase in preventable drownings on the previous year. There were 88 preventable drownings in 2017 compared to 78 in 2016.

There were two preventable drowning deaths in Taranaki in 2017.

Preventable drowning fatalities are those where safety water sector intervention could have had an influence (for example where the victim was boating, swimming, diving) while non-preventable drowning deaths include events such as suicides, homicides and vehicle accidents.

"I can't sugar coat it," says CEO Jonty Mills. "The water is our playground but it's incredibly unforgiving." obvious There is an between connection drownings and the weather, and the early onset of summer in 2017 contributed to the spike.

However, Mills believes the problem goes deeper than that. "Most of the time, it comes down to poor decision making in the general sense. That's why most drowning deaths are considered preventable."

Spikes in the under-fives and over 65 age groups are features of the 2017 figures.

"For under-fives, the only fool-proof solution is constant active adult supervision. Also, we are living longer healthier lives and retirees are more active, which adds additional risk" says Mills.

Female fatalities have almost doubled, reflecting higher participation rates across a wide range of activities and there were twice as many accidental immersions in 2017.

"Accidental immersions are people who ended up in the water when they had no intention to. This reinforces how important it is to think about water safety around any aquatic environment" says Mills.

Preventable fatalities in Auckland have doubled, while the West Coast has the highest drowning rate per capita.

"New Zealand's drowning problem is a complex one. We have a very diverse and growing population with very high participation rates across a wide range of different activities and aquatic environments" says Jonty Mills.

Mills also warns of the widening gap between the water safety sector's ability to meet growing expectation and demand.

"Sector resources are stretched beyond their capability. This is a sector which relies on volunteers and is predominantly nongovernment funded."

Mills believes all Kiwis need to take personal responsibility and is keen more to ensure our kids are coming out of the system with the skills, competencies and risk awareness to enjoy the water safely, as well as run ongoing campaigns to create a long-term attitude and behaviour change around water. We also need to secure the future of frontline water safety and rescue resources," Mills said.

The Water Safety code applies to all forms of water based recreation -Be prepared, watch out for yourself and others, be aware of the dangers and know your limits.

A musical New Year's resolution for 2018

Opunake Music Workshop January 9. 2018

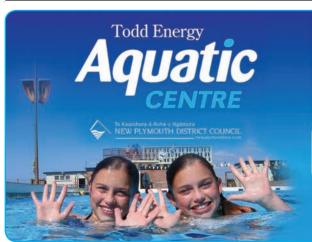

Happy New Year to all. By now, you will have opened your presents from under the tinsel laden Xmas tree, picked up the wrapping paper off the lounge room floor, and thrown it into the recycling bin. As usual, New Year's Eve has come and gone in a flash. Its 2018, and who knows if the next party will be just as good as the last one. This time of year gives us an opportunity for reflection on one's life. Take one look back and at least one step forward. Expand your horizons, maybe you realise that you've reached a plateau in your life, and you've begun to wonder if your creativity could be reawakened with a musical instrument in your hands. We are, after all, our own worst enemy, so let's take the New Year as an opportunity to expand our horizons, musically, and pick

Free Wheelhouse Training Sessions in Opunake for Community Groups

On February 15 The Wheelhouse is back in Opunake with the ever popular free two hour evening workshop, An Introduction to Governance for Trusts, Clubs, Societies, Voluntary and Community Organisations.

"We were asked by members of the community to bring the session to Opunake" said Marcia Millard, Wheelhouse Manager.

The workshop will be an interactive session covering the roles and responsibilities of the board and its members, effective processes and templates, and provides an opportunity to action plan. It will be held at the CoastalCare Centre from 5.15pm to 7.30pm on Thursday February 15.

This session will be facilitated by Leighton Littlewood from TSB Community Trust and Ella Borrows from South Taranaki District Council. Both organisations are partners in the Wheelhouse.

"It's our partners and their genuine desire to grow and support the voluntary and community sector that ensure The Wheelhouse are able to continue to provide opportunities locally. We will be running the follow up session, An Introduction to Planning, sometime after Easter," said Marcia.

For more information see our advert or visit the www.wheelhouse.org.nz/ training or to register for the workshop contact Marcia direct manager@wheelhouse. org.nz phone 06 759 1178 ext 4 cell 027 789 4351

Promoting good grief in your community

Good Grief is extending its positive activities into South Taranaki through its programme called Seasons for Growth. The programme is aimed at helping youngsters aged 6 to 18 deal with grief that can arise from many kinds of change impacting on their family, such as divorce, domestic violence, death, illness, incarceration - and even a shift. "Change and loss are part of life and grief is a normal response to these losses." ('Season for Growth' pamphlet).

The co-ordinator for the programme in South Taranaki is Sharon Albrechtsen, who works under the umbrella of the Bishop's Action Foundation with administrative input also from Catholic Care. However, Sharon stresses that the programme in not religiously based. She also points out that counselling is not provided, but rather the programme provides peer support groups, which are small in number (4-7 participants).

Mostly the programme is run in schools in school time, although other venues (and time slots) can be used. For example, Coastal Care in Opunake have kindly made their meeting room available if required. There is a modest charge of $20 per youngster for the nine week programme (There is a cheaper rate if more than one young youngster from the same family are enrolled; eg. $30 for two youngsters.). Referrals from parents are welcome.

Age-related Levels ensure that participants spend time with young people of a similar age.

Sharon has been involved with Seasons for Growth for two years and recalls the 2017 programme fondly. "We had a marvellous time." The schools involved included ones in Hawera, Eltham, Normanby and Waverley.

The youngsters can voice their feelings then express then in various ways, with an emphasis on art including drawing, painting and collage. Trained 'Companions' facilitate the group programme. She mentioned the young people constructing Memory Boxes, which they decorated. Another favourite were the Trust Buses along the themes 'Who can we talk to?' and an expansion of who they can meaningfully talk to.

Sharon is hoping some more 'companions' can be trained and she plans a two day training programme in March if you'd care to apply. (This is followed up by regular opportunities to meet, network and keep learning through Reconnectors, newsletters, conferences and the website). She is especially keen to hear from males who can volunteer some time for this worthy cause. The Outcomes for youngsters include: Learn about how different people respond to change, loss and grief

Understand that it is normal to experience a range of grief reactions

- Explore new approaches to dealing with change and loss in their lives
- Build communication, decision making and problem solving skills
- Participate in a supportive network of peers and adults
- Integrate their new learning into their relationships with family, friends and others. Last word goes to a participant who was greatly helped.

"I felt a lot better because I was letting all the pain out. Sometimes in school I'd feel like crying about it and I nearly cried. Then I just held it in. But when I went to Seasons for Growth I could just let it out and talk about it. I didn't need to cry because I could talk about it." (Matt, aged 9).

committee member, says will be great to watch.

"The horses and riders are incredibly skilled and the crowd at Baldrick's Big Day Out will have the opportunity to see some fantastic demonstrations of skill, speed and precision, giving an insight into how battles were fought and won in times gone by."

The event runs from 10.30am until 4.00pm and provides plenty of other entertainment on the day,

The Ranfurly Shield will also be on display for rugby fans looking for a photo opportunity with the Log o'Wood.

For the younger visitors, there will be a dedicated Kids' Zone as well as the ever popular "Shoot the Knight" stall.

There will also be lots of market stalls and food stalls.

"Plenty of stall holders have already booked their space for the market, so bring along your coins, as there are many great things to buy on the day."

Prizes are also on offer for a range of competitions, including Sauciest Wench, Raggediest Urchin and Best Baldrick, says Leanne.

"So come along in costume and prepare to have a great family fun day out."
